In this role, Mellon will report to CSG International's President and CEO, Bret Griess, and will work with the CSG leadership team to further build the company's progressive, employee-centric culture.

"The addition of Christine Mellon reflects our investment in what I believe is our most important differentiator in the market - our people," said Bret Griess, president and chief executive officer of CSG International. "Reaching our full potential as a business begins with a vibrant, employee-centric culture where our people feel engaged and challenged. I'm excited to welcome Christine to lead that on-going charge."

Mellon has more than 25 years of human resources expertise developed in leadership roles in technology, financial services and pharmaceutical organizations. She most recently served as vice president of human capital management transformation at Oracle and previously led global human resources for Aepona and Echostar.

Mellon has directed organizational efforts in leadership development, learning, talent management, succession planning, talent acquisition, mergers and acquisitions, engagement, compensation and benefits and change management. She has also held operational leadership roles in sales and service delivery.

As a recognized speaker and thought leader on talent management, Mellon participates frequently in national executive human resources events, including Argyle, Evanta and HCI conferences. She currently serves on the board of Family Promise of greater Denver, a non-profit organization dedicated to ending homelessness.

Mellon has a bachelor's degree in psychology from Villanova University.
