CAYCE, S.C. (Nov. 10, 2026) South Carolina's rapid growth and rising energy demand took center stage as business and industry leaders gathered at Dominion Energy's Cayce headquarters to discuss how to reliably power the state's energy future.

Approximately 50 business leaders and industry stakeholders got a behind-the-scenes look at Dominion Energy's operations as they learned more about what is required to reliably serve South Carolina's energy customers every day.

With energy among its key focus areas, South Carolina Manufacturers and Commerce has an active South Carolina Energy Council. It brings together industry leaders, subject matter experts, and employers to shape energy policy, share insights and advance the Palmetto State's economic competitiveness.

"South Carolina is one of the fastest growing states in the nation, which means that we've got growing demands on our energy infrastructure," said Sara Hazzard, SCMC president and CEO. "We wanted to bring together partners from all across South Carolina to talk about the energy needs, issues and opportunities that we have to ensure we're meeting the needs of a growing state."

In addition to presentations and a roundtable discussion, attendees and partners also visited Dominion Energy's system control room, electric dispatch center and customer service facilities.

"Energy touches everybody, not just from a manufacturing and a commercial perspective, but all the way down to individual households," said Keller Kissam, president of Dominion Energy South Carolina. "This is a great opportunity to allow the council and other state leaders to get a better understanding about the critical nature of our system and what our family of employees do day in and day out to power South Carolina."
