In Now You See Me: Now You Don't, the Four Horsemen (Jesse Eisenberg, Woody Harrelson, Dave Franco, Isla Fisher) are back — to unite with a new generation of illusionists (Justice Smith, Dominic Sessa, Ariana Greenblatt) for their most global, high-stakes magical adventure yet. Their mission: Expose the corruption of Veronika Vanderberg (Rosamund Pike), a powerful diamond heiress with ties to arms dealers, traffickers, and warlords. Aided by the legendary Thaddeus (Morgan Freeman), the two generations of magicians must overcome their differences to try and defeat their cunning and dangerous adversary, in this magic-fueled heist filled with the franchise's signature twists, turns, and thrilling reveals — along with some of the most thrilling illusions ever captured on film.

The film is directed by Ruben Fleischer, from a screenplay by Seth Grahame-Smith, Michael Lesslie, and Paul Wernick & Rhett Reese, with a story by Eric Warren Singer, based on characters created by Boaz Yakin & Edward Ricourt. It is produced by Alex Kurtzman, p.g.a., Roberto Orci, and Bobby Cohen, p.g.a.

Fleischer, best known for blockbusters such as Venom and Uncharted, brings his signature mix of humor, action, and scale to his debut entry in the Now You See Me franchise. He is already at work developing a fourth film in the series.
